The Concept of Business Ethics as viewed by Jordanian working women

The primary objective of this study is to answer the question: “Does the concept of business ethics differ according to gender?”

The present study surveyed 265 working women. Of the 256 questionnaires returned, 15 questionnaires had to be canceled. The primary instrument utilized was a questionnaire developed by the researcher, with modifications recommended by referees. Questions measured on the 5-point Likert scale.

We find that the women in industrial firms, who have a bachelor’s degree, are married and 30 years -less than 40 years report that they understand the concept of business ethics.
