Course Description

“And by the way, everything in life is writable about if you have the outgoing guts to do it, and the imagination to improvise. The worst enemy to creativity is self-doubt.”
~Sylvia Plath

This course is designed to teach you how to get rid of self-doubt and practically experience how it feels when everything is really writable. This will be done by developing your facility in writing processes, including critical reading, collaboration, revision, and editing. We will focus on the aims, strategies, and conventions of academic prose, especially analysis and argumentation. In addition, the course will teach independent research writing, the use of scholarly sources, consistency with standard grammar, diction, and MLA style.

Writing is not simply a way of communicating and nor is it merely an idiosyncratic activity. Writing is exploring and learning about yourself, others, and the world. Thus, this course is also aimed to help you understand the processes of drafting and revising, that is, of presenting, developing, organizing and reshaping your ideas intelligently and logically. You will spend most of your time discussing and writing in the classroom. We will hopefully build a community of cooperative and collaborative readers and writers in the classroom.

Course Objectives:

By the end of the course, students are supposed to:

1. Develop understanding of the process of writing, organizing, and outlining a college-level essay.
2. Fully command the conventions of grammar, usage, and mechanics.
3. Demonstrate clear thinking and clear writing as members of the academic community.
4. Demonstrate critical reading skills.

5. Demonstrate the ability to compose an essay in drafts, using feedback from the instructor and peers.
6. Have the opportunity to explore and discuss key issues in contemporary culture.
7. Develop skill in identifying useful and relevant sources and be able to judge their value and reliability in order to integrate them into the essay with proper documentation.
8. Ultimately get rid of self-doubt and be a confident writer in terms of both ideas and style.

Required Text(s):

- Oshima, Alice and Ann Hogue. Writing Academic English. Longman, 2012.

Contribution to Program Learning Outcomes:

A5, B2, B4, B5, C1, C2, C6, D1, and D2

Intended Learning Outcomes:(Knowledge and Understanding, Cognitive Skills, Communication Skills, Transferable skills).

a. Knowledge & Understanding:

- be able to express themselves in writing in correct English language and correct grammar usage,
- recognize the various writing techniques to support their topic sentences and essays,
- be able to produce coherent, meaningful, and logically constructed paragraphs and essays,
- be acquainted with kinds of essays in order to use them in expressing their ideas in the written mode of communication, and
- be able to summarize, paraphrase, quote correctly and distinguish different forms of writing.

b. Cognitive Skills (Thinking & Analysis):

- appropriately produce written forms in English with substantial themes,
- develop a discerning eye for spotting weaknesses that render a piece of writing illegible and incoherent, and
- improve their analytical and critical thinking skills through the development of well thought-out arguments in their writings.

c. Communicative Skills (Personal and Academic)

- have fostered their already-present potentials to master the skill of writing via an organized and strategic line of thought, and
- particularly develop the ability to write a well formed commentary on a literary text.

d. Practical and Subject Specific Skills (Transferable Skills)

- develop better oral skills through class discussions and particular home assignments,
- develop a sense of perseverance and diligence by trying continuously and gradually to learn from and correct their mistakes,
- expand their vocabulary through exploring new assigned topics and class discussions of students' writing and subjects assigned, and
- have their confidence in their ability as independent thinkers boosted.

Required Assignments and Weighting Scale:

1. Major Writing Assignment: There will be TWO essay-long assignments and you will receive detailed handouts about them in time.

2. Wiki Responses: There is a wiki page that I designed for the course. Every other week, there will be an assignment which constitutes of editing an essay that I will be posting. The wiki account that I will create for you will allow you to edit the content of the page. The editing guidelines will be given to you in a handout later on before the first Wiki assignment.

3. Course Blog: There is a blog I created for the course. Every other week (when there is no Wiki assignment), there will be a blog assignment for you concerning contemporary events, which might be about a piece of news, a recent film, or a political or social occurrence. You will have to submit your responses and participate in the discussion.

4. Portfolio: You will be asked to hand in a portfolio which should include the different in-class and home-take assignments.

Assignment	Score
First major writing assignment	20%
Second major writing assignment	20%
In-class assignments, wiki and blog responses, and presentations	20%
Final Exam (including the portfolio)	40%
Total	100%

Documentation and Academic Honesty

Students are expected to complete all homework, papers and projects independently (unless otherwise specified); any work must be yours and yours alone. Working together for anything other than data collection, relying on students' work from previous semesters and/or plagiarizing published research is considered cheating.

1. Documentation Style (with illustrative examples)
